BATTLEFIELD OF THE GREAT WORLD WAR

SCENES OF MIGHTY CONTEST REVISITED BY CORRESPONDENT

France Has Done a Great Work In Reconstruction, But Many Places Barren Stretches of Desolation—Millions of Men Were Slaughtered Because of One Man's Ambition—For Many Living Today There Is No Reparation—Their Losses Are Outwardly Represented By Acres of White and Black Crosses.

By Webb Miller, United Press staff correspondent.

On the old American battle lines in France, November 12, the front eight years after—

Today the thoughts of millions of Americans are making pilgrimages to these desolate fields, these weed-grown wastes, these war-stricken villages and sleepy hamlets, fertile valleys and wooded hills of France now lying so peacefully under autumn skies. Thousands are saddened by poignant memories of "Buddies" still here under lonely crosses.

This story is especially for those thousands, those millions, others will barely comprehend.

To you who viewed these scenes eight years ago, they would seem melancholy today.

Most of the houses are rebuilt, the villages are putting about their small affairs, the peasants laboriously plodding in their fields, but the grey villages and empty country roads are repopulated with ghosts—ghosts of your endless columns and roaring cannons.

The writer has just revisited these scenes deeply etched into your memories and his—the Marne, the Vesle, the Argonne.

It has rained; that unforgettable drizzle. The wind is penetratingly cold, the skies lowering, that much, at least is unchanged.

Snail-like canal boats, pilots lazily smoking, women hanging out their scanty wash, move along the Marne, that tranquil stream which was reddened with blood of American boys in June, 1918.

At Chateau-Thierry youngsters are fishing where Lieutenant Bissell and his fourteen were cut when the stone bridge was blown up behind them. Wash women chatter and pound clothes on the river bank ten yards from the still ruined building where the seventh machine gun battalion hastily mounted machine guns and blazed into the advancing Germans and forced them back from the crossing.

The marks of some of those bullets remain today as ugly scars on the young trees and the villagers' shutters along the river front are holed by the Seventh's bullets, altho most of them are puttied up.

With the exception of a ruined house here and there, few traces of the war remain in Chateau-Thierry. It has resumed its humdrum life as if the world war were only an incident in its thousand years of existence.

The Marne Salient, that triangle measuring roughly forty miles on each side, where the current of the war was turned, and where a quarter million Americans fought and suffered 30,000 casualties, is largely reconstructed and repopulated. Raw new buildings stand awkwardly in the old-time backgrounds and among the ruins.

Vaux, which you remember as a mount of stones, Belleau, Torcy, Lucy-le-Bocage, where the church is a neglected ruin; clock still 13 minutes to two. Boursches, all well remembered by boys of the second and New England division, are isolated country hamlets, silent except for cackling of hens and bleating of calves.

Eight years' growth of underbrush in Belleau Wood is being cut away in accordance with the Belleau Wood Memorial association's plan to restore the wood to its 1918 appearance. Today half of the 150 acres where 1,000 Americans were killed and 7,321 wounded, is cleared.

Grim mementoes of the killing are exposed and occasionally the remains of Americans and Germans are found. About 50 American bodies remain hidden in the matted brush. Steel helmets with gaping holes are found; strips of uniform, sodden shoes, rusted rifles, smashed machine guns, littered caved-in trenches and shallow "fox holes."

On the roads toward the Vesle, the villages are mostly rebuilt. At Cierges captured by Michigan and Wisconsin troops, the steel water tank perforated by machine gun bullets, which thousands of you saw, still lies beside the

TO INSIST ON WORLD COURT RESERVATIONS

President Coolidge Addresses Great Crowd at the Liberty Memorial Dedication.

From the base of the great monument erected in Kansas City, Missouri to the memory of the men and women of the world war, and in the presence of a huge throng from the entire southwest, President Coolidge served formal notice in an Armistice day address Thursday that the United States would adhere to the world court only on the conditions laid down by the senate.

The significance of the utterance from the president, who at all times had urged membership in the court, and in the face of reports that the nations represented in the court would never accept the senate reservations to the protocol of adherence, was not lost on the crowd which stretched far out of sight, but never out of hearing of the address.

Applause, in which cheers mingled, greeted the announcement and swung into a general ovation as the president a minute later concluded his speech.

The address was the climax of a seven hours' visit Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge made in Kansas City, Missouri, and was delivered before one of the greatest crowds the president ever has confronted.

Made in dedicating the $2,000,000 Liberty memorial, with its tall shaft emblematic of the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, which in earlier days guided a nation in critical times, it was heard by a vast audience stretched for over a quarter of a mile in all directions, estimated by officials to number at least 150,000. Loud speakers carried the words and music to all, while the radio carried them to unseen thousands more.

JURYING TRYING CHILLICOTHE COPS FAILED

To Agree After Being Out Ten Hours—Discharged by Judge Blosser.

Reporting that it had reached an unbreakable deadlock, the jury which heard the trial of Chief of Police O. A. Maughner and Officer Thomas Temple, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Ralph Strohmeyer, Chillicothe, was discharged Thursday night, after deliberating more than ten hours.

Strohmeyer died from injuries alleged to have been inflicted by the officers when he resisted arrest.

The court was advised that at one time the ballot had stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal upon either the charge of manslaughter or assault and battery.

Judge Peter J. Blosser after discharging the jury, declared that the matter of another trial was in the hands of Prosecutor W. M. McKenzie. The prosecutor said he would not announce his plans at this time.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE

Cambridge, Nov. 10.—(UP.)—After 48 hours constant search in which 150 miners worked in shifts, the disappearance of Peter "Old Pete" Sweediski, in the Cleveland mine, of the Cambridge Colliers company, remains as much of a mystery as ever, Mine Supt. J. M. Woods, said Wednesday afternoon.

Sweediski, a 70-year-old miner, became lost in the mine Monday morning, at 11 o'clock, and from that time, as far as has been learned, no one has seen him. Sweediski has been employed in the Cleveland mine for 12 years, and during that time lived near Senecaville, a small village 15 miles southeast of Cambridge. Every one in the village, man, woman and child, knew him, and all are interested in the search. Sweediski was familiar with the workings of the mine but as the mine is one of the oldest in the Guernsey valley there are abandoned workings with which he may not be familiar, and it is now feared he may have wandered in some of the old shafts and become lost.

Turn on the Cold

Cold distributed on the same general principle as heat is an innovation of the newer apartment dwellings in some of the large cities. Instead of installing bulky machinery in individual apartments for iceless refrigeration purposes, one central machine is used in the basement, just as one furnace or boiler is used. From this central plant the individual apartment housewife can control the cold in her iceless refrigerator, turning it on or off as simply as she regulates a radiator.

FORD PLANS EXTENSION OF D., T. & I. IS REPORT

New York, Nov. 10.—Henry Ford was reported in the financial district today to be considering a plan for the extension of the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Railroad into the Elkhorn coal fields of Kentucky, where he has several hundred thousand acres of coal in Clay, Perry, Pike and Letcher Counties.

Such an extension it was further reported, would enable the Ford railroad to hook up with the Virginian railroad, whose western terminus is at Deepwater, W. Va.

Not long ago the interstate commerce commission rejected a plan of the Norfolk & Western Railroad for the acquisition of the Virginian. Should Mr. Ford extend the Ironton and acquire the Virginian he would have a complete all-rail route to tide-water.

SIXTY-SIX CHILDREN "UNCLE JOE" CANNON IS SERIOUSLY ILL

From Pickaway County Under Custody of Children's Home Society.

Sixty-six children from Pickaway county have been under the custody of The Children's Home Society of Ohio, a large portion of these children have been adopted by good private families and are receiving training that will make them useful citizens.

The object of this society is long distance placement that means for instance if a child from this county were placed with them they would place it as far away from this county as possible. This places a child in entirely new environment, breaking all ties that made it become a public charge. This method has stood the test of over three decades.

The only requirements that a family has to have is that they be good, honest Christian people in position to give the child the advantages of a good home and schooling.

The main office of the Children's Home Society is located at Columbus, so that they will have a central location.

Cannon, who is past 90 years old, has been in failing health for some time, gradually growing weaker. He spent a restless night and this morning refused to take nourishment.

"He is very low but there is still hope for his recovery," the United Press was advised.

FINDS OCEAN FLOOR SHIFTED OFF ALASKA

Sponges and Coral Discovered in Warm Current.

Seattle, Wash.—Discovery of tropical sponges and coral growths on the ocean floor off the southeastern Alaska coast has convinced Capt. Charles S. Huckins, veteran deep-sea diver of Seattle, that the climate of Alaska has undergone a marked change within the last year.

Captain Huckins' theory is that there has been a violent disturbance in the Gulf of Alaska, probably of a volcanic nature—possibly caused by a series of earthquake shocks—which has diverted warm currents of water into new channels.

Prior to this year Captain Huckins wore thick mittens and heavy woolen clothing under his diving suit while exploring that mysterious world below the surface of the sea. In the season just closed he wore much lighter clothing and discarded mittens altogether.

Means Record Mild Winter.

The increase in the temperature of the water set Captain Huckins to thinking. Then came the discovery of the sponges and coral and the conclusion that southeastern Alaska's coastline, despite its northern latitude, probably will enjoy the mildest winter in its history.

Every summer Captain Huckins goes north to survey underwater locations for the big wire-walled traps in which the fish canneries capture salmon. He also repairs the breaks in these traps. He works in depths ranging from 70 to 120 feet day after day and has an opportunity to explore the bottom of the ocean such as is given to few men.

It was in Yes bay, not far from Ketchikan, center of the fishing industry, that Captain Huckins first saw sponges. Plodding along in his lead-soled diving suit, 100 feet below the surface, he saw a "beautiful red flower."

"The color of the marine plant first attracted my attention," said Captain Huckins. "From a stalk about three and a half feet high and resembling a Mexican cactus in some respects, blood-red fingerlike appendages were growing. I picked several of them to show to my companions on the surface. Upon close examination they looked so much like sponges that I brought some down to Seattle. Here I learned that indeed they were sponges."

"I was not so fortunate in collecting specimens of what I believed was coral. The growth crumbled in my hand and I was unable to bring any material amount to the surface. Next season I am going to try again."

Captain Huckins had some stirring experiences in northern waters last summer. One day—minus the knife he usually carried to protect himself—he came face to face with a giant wolf fish, more than eight feet long and with rows of teeth like those of the animal from which he obtains his name.

Wolf Fish Dangerous Foe.

"The wolf fish is a hideous-looking creature," said Captain Huckins. "He coils up like a snake and has a fin along his back about six feet long on which he could easily impale a man. This was the first one I had ever seen."

"I looked at the wolf fish and he looked at me. If he had attacked me I never would have seen the surface again. He remained motionless, fortunately, and I slowly backed away, and then promptly gave the signal which brought me to the surface and safety."

"Deep-sea diving is hazardous, to say the least. Sometimes a devilfish or octopus will come out of a cavern and twine his tentacles around my legs. Then I wield my knife. Mud sharks are another enemy of divers. Giant ling cods, with mouths fourteen inches wide and three rows of teeth like carpet tacks, frequently show fight."

"My leaden shoes are covered with marks made by these teeth. Of course the real danger lies in the chance that your diving suit may be punctured. That would mean a watery grave."

Identify Police Dog as Milk Bottle Thief

Milwaukee.—A handsome police dog was arrested here and identified as the "milk bottle thief" who has been the despair of housewives. The animal languished today a prisoner in the kennels of the Wisconsin Humane society.

For many weeks women of one section of the city have dashed out to the back porch for the morning milk to be disappointed. Milk men were censured and dairy companies flooded with complaints.

Then the other morning a woman glanced out of the back window just as the thief arrived. The dog turned his head, grasped the bottle in his teeth and leaped away. The woman gave officers information that led to the dog's capture. Under a barn were a dozen empty milk bottles. The dog pilfered them from porches, tugged at the caps until they were loosened and then lapped up the milk as it flowed out.

Still Gushing

Meyersstown, Pa.—The water that Moses struck from the rock is still gushing in great quantities. Dr. William T. Ellis says he found the place, Kadesh-Barnea, camping place of the children of Israel.

Have Various Methods of Choosing College

Doctor Jordan was pleading for more care in the selection of colleges and in the selection of courses. Too many young people select their college on the merits of its football team, only to find, too late in life, that the particular training they required should have been received at some other university.

Then there are others, like John. "Why did you go to Harvard?" the registrar asked him.

"It was this way," explained John. "I won a Harvard pennant with cigarette coupons and they wouldn't exchange it."—Los Angeles Times.

Where "Bossy" Gets Her Name

Naturalists list cattle, buffaloes and bison as near relations in the Bos branch of the animal creation. Hence the term of endearment frequently applied to the family cow. She is "bossy" by right of strictly scientific assignment.—Alvin Howard Sanders, D. Agr. L. L. D., in the National Geographic Magazine.

slated for promotion to the unofficial, feat of Senator William S. Butler of expected Senator Fess will assume the new duties at once.Roses in ChinaRoses are employed in China for led at picking time, placed at once in cool storage, with ample moisture and free circulation of fresh air, according to J. H. Gourley, horticulturist at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment station."The first essential in the successful storage of fruit is careful handling.

"A sound, properly matured apple goes thru a definite series of changes and storage does not stop but only retards these processes which culminate in ripening and final decay. If fruit, after picking, is placed where the temperature is high it will ripen rapidly, but if placed in a temperature slightly above freezing it will have its maximum keeping quality."Storing fruit in barns or warm cellars for several days does much to vitiate the value of storage. It has been estimated that fruit will ripen as much in a day at a temperature of 60 degrees as in eight to ten days at 32 deg. c."A dry storage will result in a wilting or shriveling of fruit. Common storage houses or cellars are often provided with moisture by setting tubs or pails of water in them or by soaking the earth or gravel floor, or by frequently sprinkling the cement floor.
Storage may be constructed over a running spring."Some means of ventilation should be provided to let in cool air from the outside. But the passing of air over the fruit will result in shriveling unless moisture in the room is maintained. About 80 to 85 per cent of humidity is best for ideal storage."Osirich as FoodThe flesh of the ostrich is used for food to a limited extent in the sections of the world where the ostrich is bred. It is used fairly frequently by the Arabs, who regard it as most wholesome and palatable. The value of the feathers, however, makes it improbable that the flesh of the ostrich will ever be used to any considerable extent.Too Good to Be TrueLover—"I'm afraid to ask for her

Desert Mirages

Light plays queer pranks on the desert. Often travelers will see, for a whole day, what looks like a narrow strip of water, shimmering along the horizon many miles ahead. You may well imagine how enticing this looks to those who are tired, warm, and thirsty. This is not water, however, for when the sun rolls around to the west, it disappears. It was merely a mirage.—Grit.

HARTMAN THEATER.
The musical comedy treat of the season comes to the Hartman theater, Columbus, next Monday evening with the highly interesting title of "Queen High" and has as its trio of particularly bright and stellar lights the well known Julia Sanderson, Frank Crumit and John E. Hazzard.

"Queen High" is presented by Laurence Schwab, who, together with B. G. DeSylva was responsible for the book and lyrics, while Lewis E. Gensler has written the many luring melodies that go to make up the twenty odd song and dance numbers. The book was staged by that veteran, Edgar MacGregor, who is general stage director for A. L. Erlanger and the musical numbers were devised by Sammy Lee, who also staged such popular successes as "Lady Be Good," "Tip Toes," "The Cocoanuts," "No, No, Nanette," "The Music Box Revue" and many others.

In the selection of the supporting cast for Miss Sanderson and the Messrs. Crumit and Hazzard, Mr. Schwab's purse strings were opened wide and he engaged Nine Olivette, who has scored heavily in both "Sweet Little Devil" and "Captain Jinks;" Mildred Brown, who played the title role in "No, No, Nanette;" Esther Muir who played the lead in such Broadway successes as "Battling Butler," "Mercenary Mary" and "The Greenwich Village Follies" and who has also won distinction on the silver screen, having played opposite Lionel Barrymore in "Meddling Wives," "The Price of a Party" and "The Great White Way" in which Anita Stewart was starred; Joseph Wagstaff who played the principal juvenile role in "My Girl;" Jack Leslie, the handsome and popular comedian; Don Tomkins, the dancing marvel; Lucille Moore and Jocelyn Lyle, exquisite dancing comediennes and as charming and attractive a chorus as has ever been assembled on a musical comedy stage.

Among the many delightful song hits of "Queen High" are "Cross Your Heart," "Don't Forget," "Everything Will Happen for the Best," "What's Weak About the Weaker Sex," "You'll Never Know," "Sez You," "Sez I," "In the Spring" and many others.

"Queen High" carries its own orchestra including two concert pianists to do full justice to the score. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday. Mail orders now.

Lazy people go thru life and attract no more attention than a dirty finger nail in the third grade. But the real worker becomes an important cog in the office, the factory and the community. He gives to the world a little more than is expected. He tackles life's problems with a determination to make some one a little happier, a little better off for his effort. That's life at its best, and it's the kind of stuff that keeps things going on merrily. The City Loan takes pride in having helped a lot of workers along the road to personal freedom and independence. FRESH AIR, LIKE RATION, AIDS EGG PRODUCTION.

"Fresh air for pullets confined in winter quarters is as important as an adequate ration for winter egg production." This is the conclusion of D. C. Kennard after a careful study of poultry house ventilation at the Ohio Experiment station. Proper ventilation removes excessive moisture as well as impure air and has much to do with the prevention of colds.

Moist air, contrary to popular opinion, is lighter than dry air and, like warm air, tends to rise. To take advantage of this fact, Mr. Kennard would have fresh air admitted from the front side about half way between floor and roof, as is customary, but he would go further, and provide for the impure, warm, moist air to escape between the rafters above the front plate of the shed roof house or thru gable openings of the double pitched roof house.

The amount of open space for incoming and outgoing air, he governs according to weather conditions, the floor space per bird and the type of house. The straw loft in either type insures ventilation without drafts.

Air entering the opening in the front is usually cooler and dryer than that inside and settles toward the floor where it gradually becomes warmer and takes up moisture. As it thus becomes lighter it is forced upward thru the straw loft to the rafter or gable openings.

Circulation is hastened by the air's becoming warmer after it enters the house. When there is little difference between the moisture content of the outside and inside air, the problem of ventilation and the removal of excess moisture becomes more difficult. Artificial heat is then about the only means of stimulating circulation sufficiently to insure fresh air and the removal of excess moisture.

Will Use Reflectors

in Astronomical Work

New methods of research of astronomers call for the use of telescopes of enormous size, and the apparatus of the future, it is believed, will be the reflector. This type, of which there are several forms, employs a concave mirror with a silvered surface, instead of a lens. It is easier to construct in large sizes than the older form, the refractor. Large disks of pure optical glass are difficult to produce. That is why the biggest object-glass ever made is only 40 inches in diameter. In a mirror, internal faults that would be fatal in an object-glass do not matter. The light of the star does not pass through the glass, but is reflected from its concave face. This surface is covered with a highly polished film of pure silver, deposited by a chemical process.

Seeds in Pumpkins

The number of seeds varies with the variety of pumpkin and one can only guess as to the number. The size of the pumpkin has very little to do with the number of seeds. Usually there are more than a thousand and less than 3,000 seeds.

AMUSEMENTS

Nell Gwyn, the true life feature in which Dorothy Gish plays her first strong dramatic role at the Met is a decidedly refreshing novelty. While comparable to the best Hollywood product it was produced and directed in London, where the romance of the poor orange girl who won her king's heart and became England's most famous actress actually occurred. It is in reality an international production, possessing merits quite distinct from the common run of pictures. The director, Herbert Wilcox, and principal supporting artists deserve unstinted praise for their work.

But it is to Dorothy Gish that the greatest tribute should be paid. Superb isn't the word that fits her performance; tremendous might possibly convey an idea of what Dorothy does. She is Gish, Pickford, Negri and Swanson—all in one. Incidentally, Juliette Compton as Lady Castlemaine shouldn't be overlooked.

"Nell Gwyn" differs from the usual offering in that it does not follow a certain degned plot. Mr. Wilcox frankly terms it a character study of the most fascinating actress of the English stage—"Pretty, witty Nell Gwyn" as Mr. Pepys affectionately calls her in his famous diary. Based on the affairs of Nell and her irresponsible bachelor king, the drama depicts their romance in the gay intriguing atmosphere of what was then the most brilliant court of Europe. All is told with a touch of comedy.

A pretty bit of sentiment is the incident in which Nell induces the king to turn the palace he is building her into a home for old soldiers and sailors. The story ends with a view of St. Martin's church, whose bells toll every Thursday in affectionate acknowledgment to "Nell Gwyn" one of the stage's most dramatic sweethearts.

Paramount sponsors the film in this country for British National Pictures Ltd., a new English producing company.

Police Inspector O. H. Dyer announced that he would interview members of the family and friends of Robert Abernethy, 19, of West 10th Avenue, who suffered a broken jaw Sunday when Detective Glenn Hoffman struck him in his home.

Thos. J. Abernethy, uncle of the youth is conducting a separate investigation into the circumstances. Abernethy, who pled not guilty to a charge of reckless driving and resisting an officer, is in Grant Hospital.

After questioning both Detective Hoffman and Patrolman E. J. Murphy who accompanied him, Inspector Dyer said he would interview relatives and friends of the youth who were present and then submit his report to Chief of Police French.—Columbus Dispatch.

Language in Ireland

The native Irish speak in English or the Irish language. The Irish is a Celtic language, which is now being used by a greater percentage of the people of Ireland. The decline in use of Irish began in the eighteenth century and the language was gradually superseded by English until 1901, when only 20,953, or 4.5 per cent, of the people could speak Irish. The number of pupils in schools learning Irish is still on the increase.

Injure Hams by Careless Work

Serious Damage Observed by Inspectors Traced to Botchy Operation.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Serious damage to hams, as observed in federal meat inspection and also as reported by the trade to the United States Department of Agriculture, has been traced to the careless, unsanitary castration of pigs. The damage frequently does not attract attention until the hams are about to be trimmed for curing. The principal injuries are those caused by abscesses or the scar tissues that develop in neglected cases, resulting in the condemnation, at federally inspected packing houses, of infected hams. Sometimes the damage is so extensive that only a small portion of the meat may be utilized.

Precautions Neglected.

On account of the simplicity of castrating pigs, farmers or their hired help frequently do not realize the importance of proper precautions and care. As a consequence, inflammation or the formation of scrotal abscesses occur.

Among the principal causes of the trouble are the use of dirty knives, failure to clean the area of operation, and turning the pigs into insanitary pens or feed lots immediately after the operation. Under such conditions many of the wounds are liable to become infected, finally resulting in damage to the hams.

Damage May Be Avoided.

While it is not practical under farm conditions to go to extremes in sanitation, much of the damage may be avoided by the following reasonable precautions advised by the United States Department of Agriculture: The area of operation should first be thoroughly cleaned by washing with soap and water. The operator should wash his hands in a disinfectant, and the knife should be sterilized with boiling water or a disinfectant before it is used. Immediately following the operation the wounds should be smeared with pine tar as a protection against dirt and flies. The tar should be heated to the boiling point and allowed to cool before it is used. Then the pigs should be turned into a clean pasture lot, free from mud wallows or confined to pens that have been especially prepared by cleaning and scrubbing with a disinfectant. Clean straw bedding should be provided daily for at least five days following the operation, and this should be sprayed with a disinfectant before it is used. A 3 per cent solution of liquor cresolis compositis is a suitable disinfectant for scrubbing the pens and spraying the straw.

If these simple precautions are followed, much of the present loss from death of pigs following castration, as well as the loss from damaged hams may be avoided. Farmers' Bulletin No. 1357, "Castration of Pigs," contains information on this subject of value to farmers.

Fertilizer Benefits in Many Ways With Wheat

Because it is the most important and most apparent, farmers sometimes forget that increased yield is only one of the many beneficial results of supplying adequate fertility for the wheat crop. Better yields alone justify the expenditure for fertilizer but the observing wheat producer will find that along with more bushels per acre he will have grain of higher quality, earlier and more even ripening and a decided improvement in the clover or other seedling made with the wheat.

The Ohio experiment station reports a test in which wheat grown without fertilizer had only 51 per cent plump kernels, while the fertilized wheat had 94 per cent plump kernels. At the Delaware station the fertilized wheat has weighed six pounds more per bushel than unfertilized wheat as an average for ten years. With quality of wheat so important in determining its market price, farmers cannot afford to overlook the possibility of adding extra value to each bushel as well as extra bushels to each acre by adequate soil treatment.

The campaign for more and better clover and other legumes is given a decided boost by fertilizing at wheat-sowing time, seedlings to be made next spring in the wheat. By this means two crops—wheat and clover—are benefited by one application. This "residual" effect of fertilizer is an important one economically and most experiments have shown that it is greater on clover or other seedlings made with the wheat than upon the succeeding grain or corn crop.

FARM FACTS

Sweet corn makes old land young again.

Good fences are profitable investments.

Plan well before you build—it will save you many dollars.

One-half the value of manure may be lost in four months if left exposed.

It is easier to wipe off a layer of grease from the farm implements next spring than to rub off a layer of rust.

Germany's Game Bag

Despite an area less than one-seventh as great as that of the United States and a density of population 10 times greater, Germany's fields and forests yield each year an amount of game that probably exceeds the total bag here. The total number of deer of all kinds shot yearly is estimated at about 250,000, equivalent to more than 5,000 head for each of the 48 states of the Union. Nearly 3,000,000 hares and rabbits are shot each year in Prussia alone. Germany places the food value of its annual game bag at $13,000,000.

Elusive Tack

If you aren't much of a success as a carpenter and frequently hit your finger instead of the tack, stick the tack through a piece of paper and hold the paper instead of the tack. Then you can bang until you finally hit it without accidents.

The battle of Eutaw Springs, S. C., is called by some the last real battle of the American Revolution. It was fought September 8, 1781, over a month before the surrender of Yorktown by Cornwallis.

3-Piece Suites

From April till September one's passion for wicker and cretonne goes joyfully unchecked. But after that, say about the time the sun begins to slant pale gold and the wind takes on an edge—wicker and its playmates seem strangely cold and heartless (and spring-less)! JUSTICE OF PEACE

Grafters On Trial In Federal Court.

Cleveland, Nov. 11.—(UP.)—The story of how certain Justices of the Peace of Cuyahoga county have used their offices illegally to fatten their purses, continued to be told to the Federal grand jury today by A. E. Bernstein, U. S. District Attorney.

Approximately 50 witnesses remain who have not yet told their stories. Seven testified yesterday.

The general character of their testimony, it is believed, is that the Justices and their dry raiders have practiced bribery, "case-fixing" and diversion of seized goods.

Government representatives expect to indict at least 25 persons.

ARE ACTORS PEOPLE?

Theatres, circuses, carnivals and showfolk in general, helped to raise most of the money sent to Florida for the relief of those who suffered in the hurricane last month.

Yet, when show folk in the storm area appealed for help along with other destitute people, they were told, according to stories from Florida, that no provision had been made for taking care of "actors."

Why single out actors as a class?

Aren't actors people?

Aren't they human beings like any others?

When the final explanation is turned in, it will probably be that this ridiculous discrimination was an oversight or a blunder on the part of some individual.

If so, it was an inexcusable blunder.

It is sure to put a damper on the enthusiasm of many showfolk the next time they are called upon to do their share in some relief work.—Billboard, Nov. 6, 1926.

BABES TO LET

Children for adoption may be obtained from the Children's Home Society of Ohio. This organization has found homes for a number of children from Pickaway County, but they do not as a general rule place children back in the county from which they are received. There are plenty of good private homes that are childless in the State of Ohio, to take care of every normal child that becomes dependent on the public.

Just because a child is homeless does not mean that it is delinquent or that it is not normal, all that it does mean is that it is an innocent victim of circumstances over which it has no control, and thereby becomes a ward of the County or State to take care of until it has reached the age of twenty-one.

The local juvenile court along with the Children's Home Society are trying to provide homes for these unfortunate children.

Few Have Ever Found Humming Birds' Nest

Comparatively few people ever have the pleasure of peeping into a humming bird's nest, to behold two tiny eggs like round white beads, or to see two birdlets which somewhat resemble little beetles.

In the first place, the nest is so small and so resembles the surrounding shrubbery that it is easily overlooked. Then, too, it is so cleverly hidden by its wise builders and so disguised in its construction as to require an experienced eye to discover it.

Built of soft, pliant hairs and adorned with bits of moss and feathers, it forms a downy, cuplike, secluded home. The fairy hummer of Cuba, the smallest of all the humming birds, builds a nest so tiny that it can be covered completely with a copper cent. Its eggs look like two little pearls.

The humming bird, more than 500 species of which have been classified, is distinctly American. In the main, it is a tropical bird, as fewer than 20 species are found in the United States.

The one known to residents of states east of the Mississippi is the beautiful ruby throat. Audubon called humming birds "glittering fragments of the rainbow," so gorgeous are they in color.

Father of Modern Art

Masaccio, an Italian painter of the Florentine school, is known as the father of modern art. His works became the school of instruction for all succeeding painters. He died about 1429 at the age of twenty-eight.

The sheriff's department brought in an abandoned Ford touring car this morning found at Commercial Point. The car was stolen at Lancaster Thursday evening and belongs to William Van Horn.

A brand new Chrysler sedan was found abandoned in a field near Derby this morning. The car was stripped of its battery, tires and other accessories. The sheriff's department in looking up the license found the car was stolen at Lorain.

He Wanted a Driver

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

OF COURSE, things would not have started so badly if Sam Warden had had sense enough to stipulate in his advertisement that he wanted a man driver or if Winona Harwood had had sense enough to suppose that a crotchety invalid was a man and not an old lady.

Naturally, when she read the advertisement, "Wanted, at once, careful, patient driver who knows the country well and can do all repairs for touring with crotchety invalid," she took it for granted that the advertiser was a woman.

Consequently, Winona arrived at Sam Warden's house, in the most optimistic frame of mind as well as a natty driving costume.

She was faced by a large young man who was most evidently suffering from the very recent loss of an arm.

He looked at Winona and his brow darkened.

"You're a woman," he stated peevishly.

"I've always thought so," answered Winona sweetly, "and you seem to be a man."

"And didn't my advertisement stipulate that I wanted a man driver?"

"It did not," said Winona, in her own showing a bit of peevishness, "nor did it state whether you were a man or woman."

Warden smiled dryly.

"Well, now that we are both disappointed, what are you going to do about it?" he asked, and rather wished he might take his tour with Winona as driver.

"I rather fancy looking at your back instead of one of those driver's with a cap always at an angle that irritates me so."

"I want to give it a kick straight."

Winona let out a peal of laughter.

For the first time since his accident Warden did the same.

"To tell you the straight truth," he continued, "I am most frightfully irritable and impatient and I want most of all to get away from these surroundings for awhile and fight out this depression that's got me. The girl I was to marry turned me down when she knew—I well, one can't blame her. She loves golf and tennis and I'm no good at sports any more. It's a bit rough on a girl to tie up with a one-armed man—"

"I hope," said Winona with a laugh in her voice but something nearer a tear in her eyes, "that when I do fall in love it will not be with a pair of arms."

The second spontaneous laugh fell from Warden's lips. He looked keenly at Winona and he said a bit grimly, "No, I don't think you're the type of girl to throw a man over—once you cared."

Winona turned toward the door. For the first time in her life her heart ached to erase the hurt from a man's eyes.

"Well, since I don't happen to be a man," she said, "and you don't happen to be a lady, I'll have to take another look for someone who wants a driver. But just the same," she added, "I can't see any fair reason why a man won't engage a girl driver when she knows her job as well and sometimes a lot better than a man. Besides, a girl has far more patience with an invalid and—"

"Hey, hold on—who said I wouldn't engage a girl driver? It was you who got peevish because I don't happen to be a lady. I had no idea you would take the job. I seem such a poor helpless specimen now—"

"If you were spineless—you wouldn't have such a strong desire to fight your way to readjustment," Winona said softly. "So if you want me to drive you into a brighter outlook I'm ready any time you want to start. I want you to look me always at home as a chauffeur and to treat me as such."

"And you have got to remember that I am a crotchety invalid and must not be crossed too much or I'll get mean and order you all over the place." He seemed already to have started his tour toward the brighter outlook, but Winona said nothing. She felt that he would respond to the call of life and forget that a woman had behaved badly to him before he was half way across the States.

During the following six weeks Winona played the part of a most perfect chauffeur. Never did the personal element enter into the situation. The trip itself was glorious and both Winona and her employer enjoyed the vast grandeur of the mountain roads and the unfolding miles of lovely scenery.

Warden, of course, had known from the very beginning that there was only one road to happiness for him, but he had to keep it all to himself for the time being. When the girl who had turned him down wrote a letter in which she said she had changed her mind and would marry him if he still loved her, Warden wrote back telling her very definitely that the past was past.

"We're going home by the straightest and quickest road," he told Winona, that day when she appeared ready for the final day that should take them right to the coast.

"Home?" she questioned blankly.

"Yes—unless you release me from the promise to look upon me as a burly man with a red mustache and let me behold the woman I love."

"The rest of the trip is the most lovely of all," said Winona softly, "shall we continue?"

road. Faded German billowing signs remain painted on walls.

The Roosevelts have erected a memorial watering trough at Charnery thru which Michigan and Wisconsin boys chased the Germans. Quentin fell and is buried nearby. It bears Theodore Roosevelt's words; "Only Those are Fit to Live Who are not Afraid to Die."

Fismes, where New York, Michigan Wisconsin and Pennsylvania troops had bloody fighting, is about 90 per cent reconstructed in chalky stone. The Town hall is still a mass of splintered masonry, showing marks of thousands of machine gun bullets.

From Rheims, many miles across the Champagne, stretches a blighted strip of desolate wilderness, churned by shell-fire, withered by gases, tangled with barbed wire, studded with dead stumps of shell-blasted trees. Here and there peasants have cleared a few fields. But cultivation is risky and some are killed by striking buried shells. Five laborers were blown to pieces a few weeks ago.

Many villages in this region are exterminated forever. Perthesleshurlus and Hurlus, are only piles of rubble. No human being lives within miles. You men from Texas and Oklahoma, and the Second and Rainbow divisions the latter from twenty-six states, have vivid recollections of these places. The Argonne forest is slowly obliterating its mutilations. Thick brush covers the trenches near Four De Paris, the Hindenburg line is overgrown by tall weeds and thistles hiding the blasted chunks of masonry. The dugouts have fallen in. The deep shell holes on the devastated crest of Mount Faucon can be seen miles across the country. Vanquois is a livid scar bare of vegetation. The tomato and tobacco cans you flung aside are still half buried in mud. The faded first page of a love letter from Cincinnati to a boy named Henry, still lies in a dug out near Avocourt, where the Ohio division jumped off to drive thru the Hindenburg line. Where is Henry today?

The narrow ravine where the "Lost Battalion" was cut off and suffered 370 casualties among its 564 men, is a dense thicket. Only a small painted sign marks the site.

At Vienne-Le-Chatteau the house where the New York division had headquarters in the cellar is repaired. It is a restaurant. The Seventy-seventh's cook's belligerent penciled warning, "Kitchen you keep out" is still on the door.

Barennes, captured by Kansas and Pennsylvania boys, Cheppy, where the mud was so deep, captured by Missouri and Kansas troops, are mostly reconstructed—unpretty rural hamlets inconspicuously new. The section of the Hindenburg line near Avocourt, where the Ninety-first—Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming and Utah men, smashed thru is about as you fellows left it—so Hindenburg himself would never recognize it.

The great hills around Verdun are barren scenes of desolation covered with dead leaves rustling in the winds. Here one million, fifty thousand men were slaughtered. The bones of thousands are turned into soil. Man's devastation has defied even nature's reparation.

In material reconstruction from Switzerland to the channel France has done a vast work. She has expended sixty-seven billions of francs more than fifteen billions are still required.

But for many, many, many millions living today there is no reparation, no replacement. There losses are outwardly represented by acres of white and black crosses. Strained faces and tear dimmed eyes of visitors here give only a hint of the load of sorrow these places mean to the world.

Jack Frost did a clever stunt Friday morning at the traction station. The cast iron post used to carry electric signals for stopping trains broke loose at a joint and fell to the ground. The government thermometer registered 18 degrees above zero.

BATTLEFIELD OF THE GREAT WORLD WAR

SCENES OF MIGHTY CONTEST REVISITED BY CORRESPONDENT

France Has Done a Great Work In Reconstruction, But Many Places Barren Stretches of Desolation—Millions of Men Were Slaughtered Because of One Man's Ambition—For Many Living Today There Is No Reparation—Their Losses Are Outwardly Represented By Acres of White and Black Crosses.

By Webb Miller, United Press staff correspondent.

On the old American battle lines in France, November 12, the front eight years after:—

Today the thoughts of millions of Americans are making pilgrimages to these desolate fields, these weed-grown wastes, these war-stricken villages and sleepy hamlets, fertile valleys and wooded hills of France now lying so peacefully under autumn skies. Thousands are saddened by poignant memories of "Buddies" still here under lonely crosses.

This story is especially for those thousands, those millions, others will barely comprehend.

To you who viewed these scenes eight years ago, they would seem melancholy today.

Most of the houses are rebuilt, the villagers are putting about their small affairs, the peasants laboriously plodding in their fields, but the grey villages and empty country roads are re-peopled with ghosts—ghosts of your endless columns and roaring cannons.

The writer has just revisited these scenes deeply etched into your memories and his—the Marne, the Vesle, the Argonne.

It has rained; that unforgettable drizzle. The wind is penetratingly cold, the skies lowering, that much, at least is unchanged.

Snail-like canal boats, pilots lazily smoking, women hanging out their scanty wash, move along the Marne, that tranquil stream which was reddened with blood of American boys in June, 1918.

At Chateau-Thierry youngsters are fishing where Lieutenant Bissell and his fourteen were cut when the stone bridge was blown up behind them. Wash women chatter and pound clothes on the river bank ten yards from the still ruined building where the seventh machine gun battalion hastily mounted machine guns and blazed into the advancing Germans and forced them back from the crossing.

The marks of some of those bullets remain today as ugly scars on the young trees and the villagers' shutters along the river front are holed by the Seventh's bullets, altho most of them are puttied up.

With the exception of a ruined house here and there, few traces of the war remain in Chateau-Thierry. It has resumed its humdrum life as if the world war were only an incident in its thousand years of existence.

The Marne Salient, that triangle measuring roughly forty miles on each side, where the current of the war was turned, and where a quarter million Americans fought and suffered 30,000 casualties, is largely reconstructed and repopulated. Raw new buildings stand awkwardly in the old-time back-grounds and among the ruins.

Vaux, which you remember as a mound of stones, Belleau, Torcy, Lucyle-Bocage, where the church is a neglected ruin; clock still 13 minutes to two. Bouresches, all well remembered by boys of the second and New England division, are isolated country hamlets, silent except for cackling of hens and bleating of calves.

Eight years' growth of underbrush

in Belleau Wood is being cut away in accordance with the Belleau Wood Memorial association's plan to restore the wood to its 1918 appearance. Today half of the 150 acres where 1,000 Americans were killed and 7,321 wounded, is cleared.

Grim mementoes of the killing are exposed and occasionally the remains of Americans and Germans are found. About 50 American bodies remain hidden in the matted brush. Steel helmets with gaping holes are found; strips of uniform, sodden shoes, rusted rifles, smashed machine guns, littered caved-in trenches and shallow "fox holes."

On the roads toward the Vesle, the villages are mostly rebuilt. At Cierges captured by Michigan and Wisconsin troops, the steel water tank perforated by machine gun bullets, which thousands of you saw, still lies beside the

TO INSIST ON WORLD COURT RESERVATIONS

President Coolidge Addresses
Great Crowd at the Liberty
Memorial Dedication.

From the base of the great monument erected in Kansas City, Missouri to the memory of the men and women of the world war, and in the presence of a huge throng from the entire southwest, President Coolidge served formal notice in an Armistice day address Thursday that the United States would adhere to the world court only on the conditions laid down by the senate.

The significance of the utterance from the president, who at all times had urged membership in the court, and in the face of reports that the nations represented in the court would never accept the senate reservations to the protocol of adherence, was not lost on the crowd which stretched far out of sight, but never out of hearing of the address.

Applause, in which cheers mingled, greeted the announcement and swung into a general ovation as the president a minute later concluded his speech.

The address was the climax of a seven hours' visit Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge made in Kansas City, Missouri, and was delivered before one of the greatest crowds the president ever has confronted.

Made in dedicating the $2,000,000 Liberty memorial, with its tall shaft emblematic of the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, which in earlier days guided a nation in critical times, it was heard by a vast audience stretched for over a quarter of a mile in all directions, estimated by officials to number at least 150,000. Loud speakers carried the words and music to all, while the radio carried them to unseen thousands more.

JURYING TRYING CHILlicothe COPS FAILED

To Agree After Being Out
Ten Hours—Discharged
by Judge Blosser.

Reporting that it had reached an unbreakable deadlock, the jury which heard the trial of Chief of Police O. A. Maughner and Officer Thomas Temple, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Ralph Strohmeyer, Chillicothe, was discharged Thursday night, after deliberating more than ten hours.

Strohmeyer died from injuries alleged to have been inflicted by the officers when he resisted arrest.

The court was advised that at one time the ballot had stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal upon either the charge of manslaughter or assault and battery.

Judge Peter J. Blosser after discharging the jury, declared that the matter of another trial was in the hands of Prosecutor W. M. McKenzie. The prosecutor said he would not announce his plans at this time.

Dog as Insurance

If you own the right kind of German shepherd dog, says Nature Magazine, you can save a goodly sum of money on burglary insurance. You own a dog that is even more anxious to learn than you are to teach.

She Was Bored Stiff

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

"JOAN," said Annabelle, shaking her back the latest in shingles. "I'm bored stiff with this work, this upstate town, every one in it and life in general—now—what's to be done about it?"

A twin shingle lifted itself from the packing case into which the two girls had been putting cartons of patent paper clips and its owner heaved a sigh. "You haven't said it half strong enough, old thing," said she. "But the question is—what? Do you suppose it would draw anything good if we were to do as many others have done before us and put notes in these packing cases? Stella had quite an adventure once by dropping a photograph with her address on the back."

"Yes, but neither of us would take a beauty prize even from a photograph."

"Oh, we're not so much worse than the average and what we have is all our own. Now Stella's—"

"No good knocking," said Anne; "let's get on with our own thrills. And remember, Joan, it's not a man I'm after."

"Then what do you say to signing ourselves Joe and Bill. It's more likely we'd get something than if we sign Violet and Posey."

"At times," said Anne, "you certainly do seem to have your atom of brain." The pals hugged each other joyously.

And as a kind fate would have it, it was Jimmy Townsend, London agent for the patent paper clip, who, because the cases were too heavy to carry up to his office in Holborn, had gone down to the truck to help unload. It was himself, who, lifting out cartons, found the note, written on very yellow paper so as not to escape notice. On four different occasions Jimmy had come across notes tucked in packing cases but never before had he taken more than a laughing interest in one.

This one, however, appealed to him as being from some boys who were willing to take their chances in order to make a bit of progress in the world. The letter, in part read, "—and not highly intellectual, but good workers. Nothing magnificent in way of salary expected, but must have a living wage. Plenty of vim and initiative."

Jimmy Townsend laughed aloud. "This sounds like the very boy I need in the office here. I'll write back by next post for one of them to come on."

Annabelle, otherwise Bill, when she received the letter, turned a somersault on the lawn. She and Joan were sitting out in the sun, it being a Saturday afternoon.

"Joan," said Anne, "I see it in your eye that you are not the sport that you thought you were, two months ago."

Joan blushed a warm red and Anne gave her a great bear hug. "Well—Anne dear, you see, Tommy—he simply won't hear of my going away anywhere. He gave me this last night," and Joan exhibited the all-powerful solitaire.

So it happened that Anne called on one of those student third-class ships and a mighty fine time she had. She realized, all the way over that when Townsend discovered her to be a girl he might turn her down straightway, but she was bracing herself against that possibility.

The very small boy whom Townsend employed to deliver clips and run messages let Anne in without a second thought.

When Townsend looked up from a pile of books he was slaving over he supposed he was going to be touched again for some charity.

"I'm Bill," said Anne.

"What?" And Townsend scowled. He felt he should scowl under the circumstances. He couldn't help, however, feeling that Anne, in her trim blue costume and neat wee hat under which peeped a very alert and intelligent face, would make an excellent office assistant.

"I've been too busy of late to think of anything like order," he told her. "I have no desire, however, to have a girl in the office—a man's always at a loss when there's a woman about."

"I don't expect you to fall in love with me," said Anne and lifted a defiant little chin.

"I quite realize that," said Townsend with a short laugh, "but what one expects and what one gets in this world are two different things. It's an almost foregone conclusion in this case because I need a woman in my life badly."

"Yes, but as soon as I get a slight grip of the business couldn't you talk out your troubles to me in the office and then you wouldn't have any left to take home?" Again the birdlike glance swept about the office and Anne removed her jacket and hat and put them on the books alongside Townsend's own. "I feel quite certain," she said, "that I'm needed here. Come, show me what to do first."

"I feel my cares slipping off so quickly," said Townsend as he seated himself with a great sigh of contentment beside Anne, "that it scarcely seems real." He sent a long glance, full of quiet approval, at Anne. "We'll have our business booming in no time at all, Bill."

Anne looked up and smiled brightly with a touch of color.

"You're right, Boss," said Anne.

OHIO FARMERS TO BE CAREFUL OF SEED CORN

Should be Dried Rapidly and Stored Where It Will Not Freeze.

Ohio farmers will be seriously handicapped in their corn planting next spring, unless they take special care now in selecting and storing their seed corn, according to a statement issued by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural foundation. Continued rains and over flowing streams have caused much of the Ohio corn to stand in muddy fields in the past month and exceptional care must be taken by the farmer who wants a good stand and who would reduce his feed bill next spring.

"Good seed corn next spring will depend on artificial heat and ventilation that is given it at this time of the year," the Foundation states. "As it comes from the fields in the fall, seed corn contains 25 to 35 per cent moisture, and this moisture content must be reduced to about 12 to 15 percent of the corn is to pass the winter without losing the vitality of the seed. Corn properly dried will not be greatly damaged by freezing, so that it is very important that immediately after picking, the corn be placed where it will receive free ventilation in order to dry it rapidly. This done, the corn should be stored where it will not be exposed to extreme cold."

"Any arrangement the farmer can make for drying the seed corn is all right, providing there is plenty of ventilation. Corn trees, wire racks bag strings to tie the ears or any other method usable and expedient will do. Care should be taken, however, that the moisture laden ears do not touch. Drying corn on porches, sides of buildings or on the windmill should be avoided, as this results in lowered germination next spring because of freezing."

"Plug in" Telephone Flirts on Police Board

Boston.—Many of the telephone calls answered by the Fields Corner station of the Boston police department recently have been inquiries for "Gladys," or "Ida" or "Helen."

For a long time Officer Williamson, who handles the outside calls in addition to his duties at the police box tape, was nonplussed by the frequent queries for the girls and called in vain on his thirty-odd years of sleuthing to solve the mystery.

Then one of the Dorchester telephone operators volunteered an answer. To rid themselves of persistent flirts, who insist on securing their home telephone number, the flappers, Gladys, or Ida or Helen and others give the inquisitive Johnny the police station number and have the last laugh.

The transportation problem of the country was the theme of the address given by President Frank Davis of the Scioto Valley Railway and Power company, before the members of the chamber of commerce, at the meeting held at the New American hotel Tuesday evening.

Mr. Davis said, in part, "I was invited here to tell you about one of your own enterprises, The Scioto Valley Railway and Power company. After giving something of the history of the construction of the road and said that W. J. Weaver, of this city, was one of the prime movers in the venture. He said the company has now four million dollars in railroad investments and is the only electric railroad in the country not in the hands of a receiver. It has never incurred a debt it could not pay, it has never been sued on a financial note, and has never allowed a note to go to protest and has never gone into a merger. At present there is not a single action pending against the company.

Service was opened to Lancaster July 26, 1904 and to this city, August 6, 1904. Its August payroll was $23,592 and of this amount Pickaway county's proportion was $6,297. The September payroll was $22,889 and if this amount $5,998 was distributed in Pickaway county.

The company pays out in taxes $32,497 and of this amount Pickaway county's share is $8,833. It has carried over twelve million passengers in the past ten years or an average of 1,274,755 yearly of this number, Circleville has contributed 450,000. Its passenger and freight service is the best of any railroad in the country, barring none. It also serves a dispatch freight service besides its two daily freight train services you can get parcels any hour thru the day, the dispatch service is of course a little higher, its minimum is 50 cents.

In 1924 our passenger service fell off considerably and our loss was nearly $5000. In 1925 the service showed very little increase over the previous year and the total loss for the two years was $12,000. So far 1926 shows an increase in both the freight and passenger receipts. We are now charging three cents a mile to carry passengers and if our business increases, so we can do it, this fare will be reduced to its former rate, two cents per mile.

In the past three years we have been forced to pass our dividends, but if the future business of the road can be measured by the past six months, we hope to be able to resume paying dividends.

We are now hauling eight cars of coal daily to the Pickaway plant of the Columbus Railway Light and Power company and when the company begins operations we will haul twice this number of cars daily. We are now building at our shops a new parlor car, which will carry chairs, this car will be run on a limited schedule and will land a passenger in Columbus twenty minutes earlier than regular cars. This train will stop at two places, Circleville and Ashville, and an extra charge for chairs will be demanded, but will not be a Pullman car charge. The car will be an experiment, and if it pays we will put on others.

The ungainly elephant is as fussy as a prima donna about his toilet, according to Theodore Roosevelt, who writes about his recent hunting trip in an article in Liberty. Colonel Roosevelt tells about the tame elephants from the backs of which his party did their shooting, and says:

"The elephant, if he is to be kept in top condition, should have plenty of time for his toilet in the morning. First, he is driven out by the mahout and gathens his own breakfast—branches, leaves, etc. These he brings back to camp with him.

"After breakfast, he is taken to the river—if there is one nearby—and washed. His mahout rides him into the shallows and makes him lie down on his side. The mahout then scrubs and pounds him while the elephant sluices himself with water from his trunk until he shows up like a bulky glistening black rock in the stream."

Fast washing made safe

The New

embodies a patented feature that makes fast washing safe.

The vertical crevice which is found at the base of the agitator in most washers of this type is apt to tear and wear clothing and crush buttons by grinding them between the two metal surfaces forming the crevice. This is not possible in the Haag Vortex. A patented design (it cannot be had in any other machine) eliminates entirely this destructive crack. For that reason the Haag Vortex can wash fast—60 pounds per hour—with perfect safety to clothing.

Every woman appreciates the new metal swinging wringer on the Vortex. You'll like it too. It has extra large semi-soft paralastic rolls. The bearings are made of wood which has been soaked in tallow. They require no oil—eliminating all chance of grease streaked clothing.

Call us on the phone and ask for a free demonstration in your own home. You will not be obligated.

CANADIAN DOLLAR JOLTS VISITORS

Dominion Money's Advantage Over Ours Due Partly to Trade Balance.

Toronto, Ont.—United States visitors to Canada are chagrined when they find the American dollar is now at a discount here.

In a monetary way the amount of the discount is insignificant. For all ordinary transactions United States currency is accepted as par by everyone everywhere in Canada. But on large banking transactions the technical discount becomes a reality and the American eagle has a little bit clipped off its wings.

The prosaic rates of exchange tables on the financial pages tell the story. Day after day the Canadian dollar is quoted in New York at a slight premium. Some days it is only three thirty-seconds of 1 per cent premium; more frequently it is five thirty-seconds or more.

What is the explanation? The subject of rates of exchange is so complicated and so contentious that it would be foolish to be dogmatic, but there are certain explanatory conditions that are obvious.

Production One Reason.

In the first place Canada is producing wealth at a rate which, having regard for her small population and scale of expenditure, is enormous. Hundreds of millions of dollars a year from her wheatfields, more hundreds of millions of dollars a year from her pulpwood forests and mines, to say nothing of the output of factories, grazing lands, hardwood forests, fisheries and other sources of wealth, are building up substantial surpluses.

For the year ending July 31, 1926, Canada's excess of exports over imports amounted to $388,000,000—more than $40 for every man, woman and child in the dominion. A proportionate favorable trade balance for the United States would be around $5,000,000,000.

A favorable trade balance first made its appearance in Canada during the war in the era of high prices and munitions business. It was predicted it would disappear when abnormal conditions passed. So it did—almost. In 1920 it was only $11,000,000. But since then year by year it has grown. Last year the increase was $100,000,000 and there is no sign now of its diminution.

Another factor in the Canadian dollar premium is the continued influx of outside capital. Every year for 11 years there has been a stream of United States capital flowing into Canada at the rate of $200,000,000 a year. It finds investment either in government bonds or in industrial enterprises. Before 1914 the flow was from Great Britain.

Some economists, particularly high protectionists, who are dissatisfied with the present conditions of trade, claim that it is this stream of United States capital into Canada that is the decisive factor in putting the Canadian dollar at a premium. They say the favorable trade balance is illusory and disappears when invisible exports and imports are taken into account.

Interest Big Item.

But the chief invisible item is interest on foreign investments in Canada. These are estimated at around $5,000,000,000, on which the interest would be, say $200,000,000. Substantial reductions must be made from this amount. Some of this interest remains in Canada for fresh investment, the balance or tourist traffic will account for another huge sum. Canadians also have investments abroad on which they collect interest.

Demonstrably Canada's real favorable trade balance is large even if some deduction has to be made from the $388,000,000 which the government figures show. It represents a real increase in wealth in the country. When there is added to it the large annual acquisitions of fresh foreign capital coming in to be added to the investments of profits that Canadians are themselves making, the anomaly of the premium on the Canadian dollar is not as puzzling.

Canada's prosperity makes her a better customer than ever of Uncle Sam. While her excess of exports over imports last year were $288,000,000 for the whole world, she bought from Uncle Sam $170,000,000 more than she sold to him. Even if the United States did take payment in securities, the condition reflected here is not one which Canadians accept as permanently satisfactory.

MEMORIAL

The commission created to arrange for the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth in 1932, of which Senator Simon D. Fess of Ohio is the moving spirit, has before it many interesting suggestions in regard to a permanent memorial to the "Father of His Country." These suggestions are so valuable and varied that Senator Fess has not as yet committed his support to any one of them. It is quite likely, however, that the final form of commemoration will be the establishment of a great boulevard to connect the city of Washington with Mt. Vernon, where Washington lived, and coupled with this a first-class highway from Mt. Vernon to Wakefield, where Washington was born. The distance from Washington to Mt. Vernon is 14 miles. There is now a very good road between the two places, but the proposal is to widen it and make it in every respect a de luxe boulevard.

Senator Fess has long been in favor of establishing a great national university in the city of Washington to honor the founder of the nation, but he has come to the conclusion that his idea in that regard cannot be worked out in connection with the bicentennial celebration.

Its one feature of the plan to do honor to Washington congress will authorize the publication of a vast amount of Washington literature that has never been made public, including all of his letters and orders as commander-in-chief in the Revolutionary war. Also there no doubt will be a publication of a full treatise on Washington and his family history, both in England and on this side of the Atlantic.

CINCINNATI OBJEC-

TIVE IN LASTEST
DRY DRIVE

Cincinnati, Nov. 15.—Federal and state prohibition forces were preparing for an intensive drive upon Cincinnati and southern Ohio, it was reported tonight. "Wet spots" which thus far have resisted all drying efforts are to be attacked with a zeal heretofore unknown, it is said.

"That the U. S. officials in Cincinnati are to co-operate with this movement became known through the fact that U. S. Attorney Haveth E. Mau planned to go to Columbus to confer with Anti-Saloon League officials there. The exact nature of the business there was not divulged by Mau.

The U. S. attorney was in receipt recently of a communication from the Cincinnati police asking him to aid in a drive to prevent the importation of moonshine from Kentucky stills.

STRANGE ROMANCE OF JULY AND DECEMBER IS NIPPED

Boston Police Find Old Man and Mere Child Living Together as Husband and Wife.

Boston.—An unusual July and December romance was brought to light here when pretty Lucy Paule, twelve years old, and Thomas Bosich, sixty-three, both missing for a month from Youngstown, Ohio, were arrested.

By day the child was a pupil at the grammar school but at night, she confessed to police, she lived as the man's wife. Bosich, however, declared he loved the child only as a daughter and treated her as such.

But the July and December couple were arrested at the rooming house where they occupied a room together and were asleep when police burst into their room.

At first the girl said that Bosich was her father. Bosich held to the claim until a letter written to the police by the child's mother was shown to the pair.

While Bosich was kind to her, Lucy said, he had not treated her as daughter only. Now she is used as a witness against her aged companion in charges brought against the man.

The child's father, a mill worker in Youngstown, Ohio, got trace of her when she wrote to her mother saying she would return home, if they wished her to and would send money.

A Film Kiss

It was his first call, but he was a bold, dashing blade, and as soon as they got comfortably settled in the parlor he said:

"How about a kiss?"
"All right," said the girl, as she snuggled into his arms; "but only one, mind, because father's awfully strict, and you'll have to go at 11 sharp."

Vultures have the highest developed sense of smell of most all birds. They will scent carrion for 40 miles, it is said. In the country, where a vulture has not been seen for months maybe, a dead carcass of a hog or a calf sometimes will bring a 100 to the spot.

The Turn in the Road

By H. OXLEY STENGEL

(Copyright.)

ELIZABETH DARROW set her heavy suitcase down in the middle of the room and puffed. It was a pull up those three long flights of stairs without any load. She had not quite regained her breath when there was a knock at her door. In answer to her invitation to come in a smiling little gray-haired woman appeared in the doorway.

"Sarah just told me you'd come. Had a nice trip, did you?"

"Take a seat, Mrs. Brown," returned the girl as she gave her an affectionate kiss. "Yes, I had a lovely vacation, thank you."

"All fresh to go back to your work, dear? You do look better. Nothing like a change to work wonders. You were looking mighty pale when you left."

"And what of yourself, Mrs. Brown? Do you ever have a change?" Elizabeth inquired.

Mrs. Brown shook her head. "I don't need one," she smiled.

"Anything new since I left?"

"No. Nothing except the second floor front has been rented. What was that—the door bell? I sent Sarah over to the store."

Elizabeth shut the door again and walked slowly to the window. What a contrast from the view from her windows at the seaside hotel. She felt stifled. Turning resolutely she set to work unpacking her suitcase.

Her clothes all carefully put away Elizabeth threw herself on the bed to rest and get into a better frame of mind before dinner. What was it?

She wasn't so easily spoiled that a month of ease could unfit her for returning to the city boarding house and her work as a private secretary. Part of her satisfaction in her vacation had been that she had earned it in every sense of the word by many months of hard work. Yes, what had she, Elizabeth Darrow, spinster, aged thirty—orphaned since nineteen and self-supporting since twenty—expected? To loaf forever as some women did? No. She admitted she had tired of that before the month had ended. Perhaps she had dreamed—any woman has a perfect right to dream. Yes, that was it. And she was disappointed. Silly. Anyway it was not unheard of and when one has the time, a few pretty clothes, moonlight nights, water—the complete setting for romance.

Elizabeth had listened to many a man argue emphatically that woman's place was in the home. This thing of women going into business! Feeding on excitement. . . . What if one even envied the Mrs. Browns who could at least bake delicious pies for boarders? Did it do any good? She had hidden her true feelings and had championed woman's right to a business career in all these arguments—mostly at Mrs. Brown's dinner table. At breakfast the weather was the chief topic of conversation. "You're a business woman and that's your place whether you like it or not," she went on to herself. "So there! Make the best of it. Maybe your pies would be failures anyway and your letters are not."

She was wearing a checked gingham apron and rolling out biscuit in the kitchen of the dearest little cottage by the sea and thinking that she must cut some roses from the garden for the dinner table when the dinner bell interrupted. "Oh, dear," she sighed, "that was surely the very cottage I loved so much. It was shut up and lonely when I discovered it. At least it was mine for a little while if only in a dream. Why did I have to wake?"

She hurriedly prepared for dinner. It was a surprise to find a stranger at the table—a tall, dark-haired thoughtful looking man whose temples were tinged with gray. But it was a far greater surprise to recognize him as the man whom she had passed (time and again when wandering on the beach or down a country road during her vacation. Twice he had caught her—and she him—looking back at the turn in the road. How she had hurried on then! But he had never come near her hotel and he was always alone. He had disappeared after two weeks or so. Had he come here then? She remembered Mrs. Brown had said the second story front was rented. Did he recognize her? But Mrs. Brown was introducing him. . . . He sat at her right. Mr. Hazzard. His voice was soft and cultured as he acknowledged the introduction.

Even the three flights did not seem hard after that. She had got herself in hand, Elizabeth told herself. But she knew better. . . . The boarding house was not the same place. After dinner she had usually gone straight to her room. Now she lingered. So did Mr. Hazzard. Finally, one moonlight evening, he asked her to go for a walk.

"If only we could walk to the turn in the road," he said laughing.

"Then you remember."

"And you?"

She blushed.

It was much later when she learned that he was a writer.

"I have a little cottage up there on the sea," he told her, "but sometimes it is unbearably lonely."

"Has it green blinds and a rose garden?"

"Yes."

"My cottage!" she exclaimed.

But it took weeks of persuasion to convince Elizabeth that it really should be her cottage. You see she argued in favor of a business career for women.

Winning Contribution in Flag Creed Contest

The winning contribution in a flag creed contest conducted by the Kansas department of the American Legion was submitted by Hilda Henderson, eighteen-year-old girl of Phillipsburg, Kan. Her creed follows:

"The ideals of a mighty nation are embodied in our flag. It represents our struggle for an achievement of independence and stands out as a flaming emblem of charity, tolerance and justice. Because of its noble achievements, the ideals of freedom, justice and equality, the protection which it affords, I therefore believe it my duty to my flag to love it ever, to respect and protect it always and show to my fellow men the true spirit of brotherhood, kindly tolerance and even-handed justice, the principles which the flag symbolizes, and to so act at all times that the honor of the flag may never be sullied but may continue to shine with its glory undiminished."

Civil War Flags Are in Keeping of Legion Post

The flags of two gallant Civil War regiments have been entrusted by their aged survivors to the keeping of Lafayette Post No. 37, of the American Legion of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. The Poughkeepsie post of the G. A. R. has formally turned the standards over to the World War veterans' organization and provisions have been made to preserve the banners in the Legion hall.

The flags are those of the One Hundred Twenty-eighth and One Hundred Fiftieth New York regiments. The One Hundred Twenty-eighth saw much hard fighting in Louisiana and along the Mississippi river, while the One Hundred Fiftieth participated in the Battle of Gettysburg and marched to the sea with Sherman.
